Clements has just released a follow-up whitepaper, Prioritizing Fleet Risk Management to Improve your ROI and Mission Completion, which examines operational questions around fleet risk management, including whether to centralize fleet risk management and explore self-insurance.

Is your Board Protected?

Members of boards of directors, even of nonprofits, often make important strategic and financial decisions for the organizations they manage. These decisions could result in a liability, with a single unfortunate incident jeopardizing an individual's livelihood or even career. Worse, accusations against a board member could cause potential donors to shy away from an organization, representing a significant loss in revenues.

With such a high potential risk for personal liability, it is important for board members to protect their personal assets and careers if lawsuits are ever brought against the organizations they serve. Board members of international organizations, who may be perceived as having significant assets, could face increased risks. If a nonprofit is sued, board members can be held personally liable for the actions of the organization as they have fiduciary duties to the nonprofit as well as its beneficiaries and donors.
